

UN Country Offices

The UN has its main headquarters in New York which hosts the Secretariat and the Security Council, along with head offices in Geneva, Nairobi and Vienna that help to represent UN interests, facilitate diplomatic activities and specialize in fields such as treaties, women and the International Court of Justice. In addition, there are UN offices in some countries that carry out specific projects that can assist you in your advocacy process. If your country has a UN country office use it to identify the persons with disabilities and SDG focal points. If your country does not have a UN country office, contact UNDP, UNICEF, or OHCHR country offices and contact the respective focal points.

It is important to note, that not all countries have UN country offices and while UN agencies may focus on the SDGs in the national context, they focus on their respective strategical areas (e.g., UN Women focuses on gender equality and the empowerment of women). In many countries, UN country offices are leading the development of a national roadmap to implement the SDGs. The objective of the roadmap is to align the national development plan (and any other regional plans, like EU accession or Africa Vision 2063) with the SDGs, under one data, financing and coordination framework. The process of developing this roadmap often includes a role for stakeholder engagement in planning, implementation and/or follow-up and review. For example, there may be a stakeholder meeting with the UN country team and government staff involved in the SDGs to input into the development of the roadmap. Thus, this could be a space for DPO engagement.

UN Funds and Programmes

If your country does not have a UN office, chances are that your country hosts one of the UN's Funds and Programmes which may be able to assist you in the advocacy process. UN Funds and Programmes are subordinate bodies to the United Nations, but carry out activities that are more operational at the field level and cater to needs such as development assistance, food aid, inequality and the environment, many of which align with the Sustainable Development Goals of the 2030 Agenda. If there is no UN country office in your area, contact one of the following UN Fund and Programme Offices: United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund (UNICEF), or United Nations Human Rights Office of the High Commissioner (OHCHR).
